Sample Task 1 Question

The line graph below shows the percentage of households with internet access in four different countries from 2000 to 2020.

Sample Band 9 Response

The line graph illustrates the proportion of households owning internet access across four nations—Country A, Country B, Country C, and Country D—over a twenty-year period from 2000 to 2020.

Overall, the percentage of households with internet access increased in all four countries during this period, with some nations experiencing more rapid growth than others. Notably, Country A and Country B started with relatively high access levels in 2000 and saw significant rises, whereas Countries C and D lagged behind initially but caught up towards the end of the period.

Initially, in 2000, only around 20% of households in Country D had internet access, the lowest among the four. By 2010, this figure had risen steadily to approximately 60%. Conversely, Country A began with a high level of about 70% in 2000, which increased gradually to nearly 90% by 2020.

Country B showed a similar upward trajectory, starting at roughly 50% in 2000 and surging to nearly 95% in 2020, making it the country with the highest level of household internet access by the end of the period. Meanwhile, Country C experienced moderate growth from 30% to just over 70%, lagging behind the others but demonstrating consistent expansion.

In summary, while all four countries saw substantial growth in household internet access over two decades, the most notable increase was in Country B, culminating in near-universal coverage, whereas Country D, though improving, remained the least connected in 2020.
